Jackson County, NC Science Fiction Author Publishes First Novel in New 'Erin Landers' Series Aimed At Youth Audience

Charlotte, NC—(September 6, 2004)— Author Cherrie' Ann Moses of Tuckasegee, NC announces publication of the first in her 'Erin Landers' science fiction mystery series - ERIN LANDERS AND THE PHANTOM PERIL OF THE NIGHT' - written for middle grade to young adult readers.

"My goal is to write books which help develop the natural curiosity of children in exploring the many fascinating areas of science and archeology," says the former public school teacher.

The 46-year-old Moses taught in the Jackson County School System for 14 years before a serious medical condition forced her to take early retirement on disability.

After retirement, Moses decided to transform her love of science and teaching into creating a series of books, which would engage young people and generate their interests in learning more about the many areas of science.

Moses resides in Tuckasegee, NC, a rural farming community in the Blue Ridge Mountains and is currently working on her second book in the ERIN LANDERS Series.

Moses is a member of the Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators.
